Plus: . Plus: .The present invention relates to an automatic rolling apparatus to continuously form cigarettes from a continuous tobacco sheet web. The tobacco web is continuous in form and comprises a band or sheet of tobacco which is longitudinally and transversely perforated to form a multitude of axially parallel cigarette rods. The cigarettes generally are already ready for shipment. However, in the course of their further processing, such as packaging and handling, it is frequently convenient to manually split and/or change their length. This is done, for example, in the case of cigarettes with slightly differing characteristics. In U.S. Pat. No. 3,676,786 there is already described an apparatus and method for the continuous formation of flat, oval and U-shaped cigarettes, wherein the cigarettes are removed from
