) [6k] A: Yes, we do use the verb tables in spoken English. We have to do so to get clarity. You have to understand that in spoken English the verb tenses are often in the future. For example: I can do it now I can do it tomorrow I can do it in a week. We don't use the past participle with these verbs, but the future one. Using the past participle is a technical English rule and it is sometimes (in my experience) not understood by native speakers. Also, sometimes the past participle is formed by omitting the verb, for example: Can I do it? We don't use the first form. Can I? So, in summary, your comments about the verb tables are true. Also, we don't use the infinitive in spoken English, so your second example about "to help" is not grammatical. Q: This batch script doesn't work, but it seems fine I have written a batch script like this: @echo off echo c:\1.txt echo c:\2.txt exit I run it like this: bat C:\script.bat > C:\output.txt But nothing happens. What am I doing wrong? The problem is that a script file has

a.bat extension, not a.cmd extension. (For Windows NT or later). You'll need to change your script to: T-SQL - Concatenate rows of a single column I have a table ID | COLUMN1 | 1 | 1' 2 | 1' 3 | 1' 4 | 2' 5 | 1' 6 | 3' 7 | 1' I need to find the largest integer value in this column, which is 6. The desired result is: ID | MAX_INT | 1 | 6 | 2 | 1 | 3 | 1 | 4 | 2 | 5 | 1 | 6 | 3 | 7 | 1 | 82157476af
